Backup is important

We live in an information era and most offices are virtually paper free. Users today are electronically storing more information than ever. Now companies are dependant on the use of computer applications such as CRM, ERP, e-mail and business decision support.

How long can a company survive without having an appropriate back-up system in place?

Countless studies have shown that small businesses without a thorough, regularly tested recovery plan are likely to go out of business within a few months after a data disaster. The loss of mission critical data can have staggering financial, legal and productivity ramifications on businesses and home users alike.

Businesses of all sizes must guard against unexpected loss of their data or intellectual property.

But few remember to carry out this crucial task and many forget to backup regularly. Failure to back up your computer files can have drastic consequences.

Unfortunately, many businesses - especially "start ups" - find it tedious and time consuming to perform the many steps involved in creating a successful backup: doing backups daily, replacing worn tapes, and periodically checking the backups and disks to make sure the back up has been performed successfully.

"Good comprehensive backup solution is probably the most important software purchase a business owner or private person can make."
